

GLOBAL STUDIES MINOR

FALL 2009

Global Studies is a broad-based study of processes and problems that transcend national boundaries, preparing students to become global thinkers and problem-solvers for the twenty-first century.

The Global Studies major includes the study of global historical processes that have made the world more interconnected as well as contemporary issues of global politics, violence, and security issues, global migrations, travel and social movements, global literature, arts and media, the global economic system of trade and finance, and issues of global health and disease, environmental change, and sustainability.

Students will be grounded in two disciplines, as well as a geographic area of study and a foreign language.

Lower-Division Requirements (4 courses)

- GBST 001 - Global History, Culture and Ideas
- GBST 002 - Global Socioeconomic and Political Processes
- Proficiency of a foreign language at the sixth quarter level
- One additional course in World History taken in consecutive sequence with the first World History course (can be used to satisfy breadth, GBST 001 & 002 cannot)

Upper-Division Requirements (7 courses)

Complete seven (7) upper-division courses from the list of approved courses found on the back of this page. Students may focus on the humanities or social science, but no more than seven (7)

- Five (5) courses with significant global content in at least two different disciplines
  - MUST include at least one 100 level Global Studies (GBST) course
- Two (2) courses in a single geographic area
(i.e. 2 courses from the list that focus on Latin America, Europe or Asia from any discipline)
